Dubliner Chris Singleton's acclaimed album, 'Twisted City', is a record about London. Loosely conceived as a tube journey through the capital, every song is a stop on the line and about a particular London location or experience. It's picked up fantastic reviews and tracks from the record have been featured or playlisted on major UK and Irish radio stations, like BBC Radio 2, RTE Radio 1, LBC, Kerrang and Today FM. His guerrilla gigs in London to promote the record – including a tour of London on public transport (a bus, a boat, a tube and a taxi) ended him up on ITV and BBC News.

Following Radiohead's example, Chris recently made the album available as a free download. But he's gone one better, by creating a unique musical experience, based around London, to accompany the download.

The idea is simple: you download the 'Twisted City' album free, and you get a guidebook which you print out. You then slap the album on your iPod or MP3 player and use the guidebook to go on your very own tour of the London locations which inspired the album. At each location you play the relevant song from the album and find out about the area.

On the journey you'll take in famous London streets and sights – not to mention some great pubs where Chris either played gigs or went drinking with his band (or both!). The guide is packed full of London and rock trivia and, when coupled with the backdrop of a fantastic free album, makes for a great day out.
